UNIVERSITY ADMINISTRATION IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

by

PROFESSOR (DR.) A. H. HOMMADI

This unusual book is provocative without being blunt, truthful and critical yet clear, written by the Iraqi Ex-Vice-Chancellor Prof. Dr. A. H. Hommadi who is at present Professor of Industrial Engineering and Management in the College of Engineering, Al-Fateh University, Tripoli, Libya.

The book asserts that the universities in developing countries are not fully serving the educational needs of this expanding population of students. It discusses the need of many options in disciplines within each college or department new curriculum, new extensions, off-campus programmes, new organisational set-up, better student services, more research work, graduate work programmes and intra-action among the universities of the world, and especially those of the third world.

The book contains many significant statements on the development of the philosophy and the principles of higher or university education as well the best methods and systematic approach to those principles. The book analyses a series of problems of special interest to the university administrators, university planners, faculty members, educators and students who are interested in higher education. Such questions are :

(i) How can one make the organisation of the university more efficient ?
(ii) What are the characteristics of the university education in a traditional society ?
(iii) What will make university education more likely to reflect the needs of the society it serves rather than its own interests ?
(iv) What are the relationships between administrative changes and corresponding process of economic, political, societal and cultural development ?

The bocok provides a fresh insight into problems of expanding trends affecting higher education and university administration in the developing countries. Without it no university Vice-Chancellor or a Dean or an administrator can perform his role of leadership or make his best choice in the alternative programmes within the university.
